After reading Susan Shelley's Opinion article, in the Sunday OC Register regarding campaign finance reporting requirements, it would appear that, as an "independent" candidate, she was caught in a double standard for her campaign finance accumulation. Apparently, from the few examples stated, if you are a candidate who is outside the party affiliation recognized by the adjudicators, you are fined at a higher rate. It is obvious that such a double standard could discourage citizens who would wish to run for public office if they were other than the "recognized" party affiliation. This practice must be researched and corrected immediately!
